

MAKE THE NEXT ONE COUNT.

A starting point for planning the marketing around your next venue launch, event or campaign.

A CLEAR OFFER. A PRACTICAL PLAN.

Use the next three pages to decide who you want to reach, organise the work and review what happened. Adapt the timing to your team, budget and event.

Preview draft: original sample content for the website concept. Review and tailor it before using it as Triple Down's published guide.

START WITH THE NIGHT.

WHO IS IT FOR?

Describe the person most likely to choose this experience. Think about their interests, location, occasion and reason to go. Avoid trying to speak to everyone.

WHY THIS ONE?

Write one sentence that explains the experience and what makes it worth choosing. Lead with something the guest can recognise: the line-up, food, setting or occasion.

WHAT SHOULD THEY DO?

Choose one main next step: book a table, buy a ticket or register interest. Check that the destination works on a phone and shows the date, place and relevant details.

WRITE YOUR ONE-SENTENCE BRIEF

For [audience], this is [experience] at [place/date]. Come for [specific reason]. The next step is [action].

BUILD A SIMPLE RUN-UP.

This four-week outline is a starting point, not a fixed rule. Work backwards from your date and adjust for the size of the launch.

FOUR WEEKS OUT

Set the offer and booking destination. Confirm who owns copy, imagery, publishing and enquiries. Gather real photographs, video and the essential information.

THREE WEEKS OUT

Introduce the experience. Show the people, place or line-up behind it. Give partners and collaborators a clear link and a small set of approved assets to share.

TWO WEEKS OUT

Answer practical questions. Show what a visit feels like and what is included. Check whether people who reach the booking page can complete the next step.

FINAL WEEK

Repeat the details clearly. Share useful reminders with people who have chosen to hear from you. Brief the team so online promises match the on-site experience.

Afterwards: capture useful feedback, thank the people involved and record what the team would repeat or change.

MEASURE WHAT MATTERS.

CHOOSE THE GOAL FIRST

Pick an outcome that matches the campaign: bookings, tickets, enquiries or attendance. Write down a realistic target and the period you will measure.

KEEP THE NUMBERS DISTINCT

Reach, views and likes can describe attention. They do not by themselves prove sales or profit. Review them alongside your booking, ticketing or enquiry records.

ASK THREE QUESTIONS

What brought the right people in? Where did people lose interest or struggle? What could the team change for the next campaign?

YOUR REVIEW NOTES

Goal and actual outcome

One thing to repeat

One thing to improve

Want to talk through your next project?

nico@tripledown.group
